To Flush Or Not To Flush

Pop quiz: Which of the following items should be flushed down the toilet?

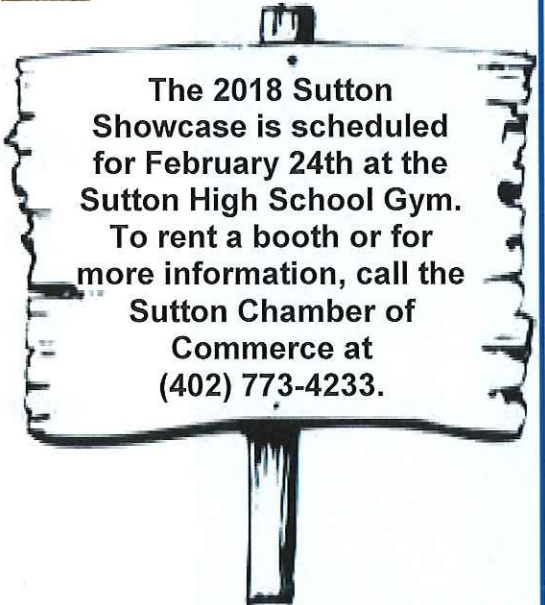

- Paper towels
- Kitty litter
- Baby Wipes
- Plastic bags
- Diapers
- Rags
- Toys
- Latex gloves
- Paints
- Household Chemicals
- Cigarette butts
- Dental floss
- Q-Tips
- Facial tissues
- Condoms
- Hypodermic needles
- Feminine hygiene products
- Anti-freeze
- Grease
- Pesticides
- Flushable wipes

The answer is none of the items listed above should ever be flushed down the toilets!

When things that are not meant to be flushed end up in the sewers, it can result in plugged or overflowing toilets, poor drainage in sinks or showers, raw sewage back up, overflows into nearby surface waters, health hazards, nuisance odors, and costly maintenance & repairs. Even things that are labeled as being 'flushable' pose the potential to cause sewer problems as many of them are not designed to disintegrate completely or in a timely manner. So what can be flushed? The 3 P's— poop, pee, and (toilet) paper. What about everything else? All other items should go in the trash, even if they are marked as being flushable. What about my kitchen sinks and bathroom drains? In addition to not pouring oil or grease down drains, household chemicals should not be poured down drains. How do you dispose of leftover chemicals, cooking oils, or grease? Household chemicals should be disposed of as directed on the back of the bottle. If there are no disposal instructions, call the manufacturer and inquire about their disposal recommendations. Grease and oils should be cooled to room temperature and placed in a secondary container such as an empty jar with the lid properly closed and placed in the trash.

Expired and Unused Medications

If you are like most of us, there are probably medications in your medicine cabinet that are expired, or for ailments that no longer need medicated. So, what does one do with the expired and unused medications? First of all, don't flush any medicines down the toilet, pour liquid medications down the drains, or throw them in the trash. Medicines that are improperly disposed of have increased chances of showing up in our water supply, or harming wildlife. Any medications can be taken to the Sutton Pharmacy for proper disposal at any time.
